

Stockholm, Sweden October 7 2014

Thank you for your interest in QINOPractic Medicine, here's an invitation to the next Module 1 course.

QINOPractic Medicine consists of 2 modules to become a diplomate. After these, there is one more Module in the Physical part of QINOPractic Medicine . We also have a mental/psychological part as well, that would then be Module 4 to 8, if you wish to continue with QINOPractic Medicine to achieve Master Practitioner.

Module 1 focuses on providing a thorough understanding of function and physiology of the body. Understanding both the neuro-muscular and patho-physiological roles is vital for the practitioner in order to understand and predict how the body will react to particular stress and trauma. This understanding will prevent misdiagnosis and ensure treatment is accurate leading to desired outcomes and effective results. An incorrect diagnosis and/or lack of understanding of functional mechanisms can lead to an incorrect treatment or not getting the required result.

This first module will give you a number of valuable understandings and techniques, which can be used on a daily basis when treating your patients. These include;

- Physiology of pain and why some experience pain whilst others do not
- Nature of chronic and recurring pain
- Educational tools to assist your patients in preventing injuries
- Rehabilitation techniques
- Identifying the subtleties of presenting complaints to indicate status of injuries.

This module will leave you well equipped to treat your clients from day 1 after the course to free them from a vicious cycle of chronic pain.

Module 1 focuses on understanding and a new way of thinking plus a whole lot of useful techniques. Module 2 focuses more on treatment and now it becomes more advanced... We "tie the bag together" (Swedish saying) and give you an holistic approach that is unique. This is where you finally receive your diploma as a QINOPractic Medicine practitioner.

Before we get into what I want you to read up on, let's discuss some practical information
